Example ... The professions "Engineer" and "Consulting Civil Engineer" are regulated in Germany. This means that the pursuit of these professions is linked under government regulations to the possession of certain qualifications. In Germany, the occupational title of "consulting engineer" is a requirement for working as a test engineer or as a recognised expert. In order to earn the right to hold such an occupational title, engineers need to demonstrate an additional three years of occupational experience following completion of a degree in engineering and also need to have completed certain advanced training courses. If you wish to pursue the profession of "engineer" or "consulting civil engineer" in Germany, the responsible authorities must establish the equivalence of your foreign qualifications with German qualifications in the reference profession.
